Excellence is not an act, but a habit. Who would exemplify this saying better than six bright students of Gujarat National Law University who opted out of placements this year to pursue higher studies in foreign universities.

What's commendable about these ambitious youngsters is the fact that they secured their seats in prestigious universities like Cambridge University, New York University and London School of Economics on their own accord.

Final year LLB students Rishav Banerjee, Srikant Hariharan, Aviral Dhirendra, Shashvata Shukla, Aditi Suresh and Rohan Shah have set a precedent for aspiring lawyers. They believe it is their hardwork, determination, consistent track record and active participation in co-curricular activities that got them what they wanted.

"We have worked hard to achieve our goals amid the intense competition on the campus. While excelling in academics was most important, our professors also motivated us to participate in moot courts, debates and cultural activities," said Rishav Banerjee, who has enrolled for LLM (Master of Laws) at Cambridge University, United Kingdom.

"We have always encouraged our students to have a global outlook with a sense of social responsibility. I am confident that our students will carve a niche for themselves in their glorious career," said GNLU Vice Chancellor Bimal Patel.
