How to Publish

Short workshop on how to publish with an international academic publishing house, where to start, the process, the proposal, the review procedure, the contract, royalties, other benefits and more...

Brill cordially invites you to attend a short workshop on “How to Publish.” The workshop will focus on how to publish a book or journal article with a leading academic publisher in the field of law.

Since Brill, who were already a 300 year-old established publisher in the Humanities, acquired the legal publisher Martinus Nijhoff in 2003, we have become one of the leading publishers in the fields of International Law as well as Humanitarian/Human Rights Law. We are happy to share our expertise with you, in a convivial setting. This event is part of a tour around the leading law universities in India.

In Short:

What will happen? – A short workshop on the publishing process.

Who should attend? – Faculty, students and librarians. Those with an interest in publishing their academic research, also established authors, as well as anybody interested in the publishing process.

Who will give the presentation? – Mr. Vincent Oeters MA, lecturer at academic and public events, who works as Marketing Manager responsible for India at Brill.

How long will it take? – The presentation will take about an hour, then there will be an opportunity to discuss and ask questions. Tea and biscuits will be provided afterwards, where you are cordially invited to chat to the guests in an informal setting.

Is there any cost or obligation? – No. There is no cost in attending the workshop, and although the presenters are from one publishing house, the explanations are publisher-neutral so it is not solely about publishing with Brill.
