Ahmedabad: Three students from Gujarat National Law University (GNLU) — Ankita Dinkar, Torsha Dasgupta and Chaitra S — have been selected for the 11-month Legislative Assistants to Members of Parliament (LAMP) fellowship. All the three girls are part of GNLU's five-year integrated programme.

“This is fifth consecutive year when the GNLU students have been chosen as fellows of the prestigious initiative. It not only provides the students a peek into life and functioning of a member of parliament from the close quarters and understand how our parliamentary system works but also helps them develop concepts of law, society and legislation,” said a senior GNLU official.

The fellowship entails assisting the MP from monsoon session to budget session and providing extensive research support for his/her parliamentary work. The fellows also get a chance to engage with policymakers and experts from diverse sectors through participation in workshops on important policy and development issues.
